SMOCKING ON KNITWEAR

In this type of embroidery, it is necessary to prepare for the smocking by planning the fabric in a knit and purl rib. It is particularly attractive for yoke effects in children's wear and bed jackets.

1. A suitable texture is made with P 6, K 1 in the first row, and P 1, K 6 in the return row. The side with the purled ground is the right side of the garment.

2. Gather up the material with tacking stitches, as in ordinary smocking, picking up the plain or knit stitch instead of transferred dots. The rows of tacking should be a little farther apart than is usual for cloth. Draw up the tacking threads, and proceed to work any kind of honeycomb smocking desired. Closer types of smocking are not suitable for knitted fabrics. They take up too much width of fabric, and the finished effect is too lumpy.
